Be among the first to see a new, installation-scale textile work as it is being created in a weeklong Centrum residency by artist Janice King! The “Trees of Memory Future” project will draw viewers into new ways of thinking about our beloved Northwest forests and their potential futures in the face of climate change.

Learn about the inspirations, materials, and techniques behind this large, multi-panel work as well as the creative experience of an artist residency.

Drop in anytime during the open hours—and bring your quilting, fiber, and art-loving friends!

Janice King is a self-taught fiber artist who has long had a deep sense of place in the forests of the Pacific Northwest. Her work encompasses art quilting, textile collage and art crochet/knitting, combining new with rescued or repurposed materials. She strives to create art that educates from a base of naturalist knowledge and resonates with the emotional and spiritual dimensions of daily human life.
